CONSTRUCTION: Built between 1762 and 1767, this magnificent château was designed by Joseph Abel COUTURE, architect to King Louis XVI, as a country residence for a count. At the time, it was built entirely in limestone to a single design, with identical north and south elevations.

RESTORATION: in recent years, the château has undergone a complete restoration to the exacting standards required of French historic monuments; the structure and fabric of the château are in excellent condition with no expense spared in the quality of the materials used, the craftsmanship employed and the attention to detail.

FUTURE POTENTIAL: The new owners will certainly have their own vision and aspirations for the château. The property has so much potential to explore in staff accommodation, multiple outbuildings, and extensive grounds. Under the château, there are also 300 m² of vaulted limestone cellars with original fireplaces and atmospheric masses.
